

The Energetic, Progressive Thalhimer Store

Inspired by an invincible ambition to serve the people—to serve them thoroughly and systematically—to give them the best for the least, and as nearly as possible to do so continually—inspired by such motive and moving in such activity, how can we fall short of success, and success in liberal measure?

THALHIMER'S announce the Fall opening Cloak and Suit Department Monday, October 3d. The ladies of Richmond are invited to inspect this elegant and well-selected display of Suits, Waists, Coats, Skirts and Ready-to-Wear garments. We have excelled all preceding seasons, and have culled the choice productions of foreign and domestic markets. All Invited. No cards.

A Silk Sale

These Silks impress themselves vividly upon all who visit the department. First is the amazing variety of weaves, grades and patterns. Prices constitute the second, but equally important, feature. They are absolutely the very lowest that can be asked for reliable materials. Just a few items to show how good qualities and low prices go hand in hand here:

50 pieces New Shirt Waist Suit Fancies, in the latest pin stripes, checks and novel weaves, choice colors for street wear, Taffeta and Louise weaves—the kind sold regularly at $1.00 per yard. Very special, Monday only. 50c
40 pieces 23-inch Pure Silk Crepe de Chine, in full line of colors for all occasions, white, cream and black included; regular value $1.00 yard; Monday only. 50c

Best Gloves Made

Service, style, shapeliness, comfort and beauty are the qualifications which characterize all our Gloves. Every pair sold means the selling of another pair. Your permanent patronage will satisfy us. Aside from quality, we give you a decided price advantage. We can do this, for we import direct in large quantities from the master makers of France and Germany; also buy most extensively of the reliable American makers. We can save you money on every pair—the $1.00 ones or the $1.75 ones, and on all the grades between.

DAINTY Wear for Infants and Children

AMERICAN LABOR AND THAT OF EUROPE

John Mitchell Points Out Where the Advantage Is With Our Men Who Toil.

BETTER HOURS AND WAGES

The American Works Harder, Gets More and Can Buy More Than His British Brother.

By John Mitchell.

(Special correspondence of the Times-Dispatch.)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Oct. 1.—It seems almost presumptuous to make a comparison between American and European labor conditions after only a few months' stay in Europe. To carry out such a comparison thoroughly and completely would require many years of study devoted to this single object. No one, however, who is interested in labor problems can travel through Europe without being struck by certain salient, important differences between American and European conditions.

One of the chief difficulties in the way of making this comparison lies in the fact that in each country of Europe conditions are different. There is a greater variation between the situation of the British miner and the miner of Silesia than between that of the British miner and the miner of the United States. One can speak only in general terms and can give expressions only to those impressions which are the most obvious and striking.

Americans Better Off.

Generally speaking, the material situation of the American workman is far superior to that of his European brethren. Although wages, hours of labor, and general conditions of work are far better in the United States than in the United States, the situation of the American workman in these respects is better than that of the European workman. Wages, measured both in money and in value of money, are higher in the United States than in England, and are much higher in the United States than in Germany, France or Belgium. The working day appears to be slightly longer in the United States than in England, and somewhat shorter in the United States than in Germany, France or Belgium. The intensity of work is much greater in America than in any of the countries named. There is less idling, less dawdling, less "slopping" and more precision and activity in the work of the average American than in that of the Englishman, Frenchman, or German.

The productivity of labor is also far greater in the United States. The average American produces more goods in a much more time than his European brother, and the higher wages which the American workman receives are, therefore, often compatible with a lower cost of production than is possible in Europe. This greater output of the American workman is due to the fact that, owing to his better nourishment and better training, as well as to his better education, he is able to accomplish more and to work with greater muscular and nervous energy. Moreover, the higher wages of the American workman constantly stimulate the employer to introduce labor-saving machinery and to effect economies which are not at the expense of the workman. In addition, the greater natural resources of the country and the larger and more efficient manner in which industry is organized in the United States, permit the American employer to pay higher wages without incurring a greater cost, which fact should be borne in mind when estimating the advantages and disadvantages under which the American workman labors.

Standard of Living Higher.

In Europe, as in America, one constant ly hears the statement that the dollar of the American workman does not go further than the shilling of the Englishman, the mark of the German, or even the franc of the Frenchman or Belgian; in other words, that the cost of living in proportion to the wages earned. Nothing could be further from the truth. The standard of living of the American workman is far from what it should be in a country of our surpassing wealth and great natural resources, but it is higher than the standard of living in England, and much further advanced than on the continent. The European workman spends less on living because he has less to spend, and he receives less of the necessities, comforts, and luxuries of life than does the American workman. He lives on less money, he has fewer clothes and they are of poorer quality, and his lodgings, with some exceptions, are much worse. The chief article in the budget of the workingman—food—is on the whole less expensive, and in many cases is more expensive than in the United States; house rent—which is the second largest item—is not much less expensive, and in some cases is more expensive than in the United States. In places of the same population in the United States, the things which are cheap are those which do not enter largely into the consumption of the working classes or which do not have a great influence upon the purchasing power of wages.

Their Women Work Harder.
Taking into consideration the whole of Western Europe, I would say that the women work more, and, perhaps, at harder toll than in the United States. The conditions surrounding many women workers in our great American cities are so favorable that they are not doing as much as their European counterparts. In many cases, the women workers in Europe are engaged in the most arduous and dangerous work of picking stone above the surface of the English, Scotch, Welsh, Belgian, French and German mines. Women are very largely employed in agriculture, and in many towns are put to work clearing the streets, or are engaged at other tedious and wearying tasks. In many countries women still seem to be the cheapest and most servicable beasts of burden. In some they are employed at the most menial and degrading work, and in many towns are put to work clearing the streets, or are engaged at other tedious and wearying tasks.
